The think tank suggests that the government should consider other PPP modes, such as joint ventures and equity partnerships, to attract more private investment and improve the quality of infrastructure projects. This move is expected to help the government achieve its goal of improving the quality of infrastructure in the country.

'Pinoy drivers have eyes at back of heads'

By David Brown

Dakar Rally champion driver Maunika gets a dose of his own medicine

MANILA, Philippines — It's a common sight on the roads of the Philippines: a driver looking out the side window of a vehicle, eyes fixed on the rearview mirror. It's a habit that has become a staple of Filipino driving culture, and it's one that has earned the country a reputation for being a dangerous place to drive. In a recent article, I wrote about the dangers of driving in the Philippines, and I received a lot of feedback from readers. Some of them said that they had never heard of this habit, while others said that they had seen it many times. I decided to investigate further, and I found out that this habit is not just a local phenomenon, but it's a global one. In fact, it's a habit that is common in many countries around the world, and it's one that has been studied by psychologists and sociologists. So, what's the deal with this habit? Why do drivers look out the side window? Is it just a habit, or is it something more? In this article, I'll explore the reasons behind this habit and what it tells us about human behavior.

Maunika looking out the side window

One of the most common reasons for this habit is the fear of being rear-ended. In many countries, the rearview mirror is the only way for a driver to see what's behind them. If a driver is looking out the side window, they can see the car behind them more clearly, and they can react more quickly if they need to. This is especially true in countries where the traffic is more chaotic, and where the rules of the road are less strictly enforced. In the Philippines, for example, it's not uncommon to see a car change lanes without signaling, or to see a car cut in front of you without warning. This can make drivers feel vulnerable, and it can make them feel that they need to be extra vigilant.

Another reason for this habit is the desire to see what's going on in the rearview mirror. In many countries, the rearview mirror is the only way for a driver to see what's behind them. ## The 'Hard' life of Mitsubishi

47 years of struggle and triumph in the Philippines

By David Brown

MANILA, Philippines — Mitsubishi Motors has been in the Philippines for 47 years, and it's still going strong. The company has a long and storied history in the country, and it's one that has been marked by both triumph and struggle. In 1968, Mitsubishi Motors first entered the Philippines market, and it has since become one of the most successful Japanese companies in the country. Today, Mitsubishi Motors is a major player in the Philippine automotive market, and it's one that has helped to shape the country's automotive industry. But, like any company, Mitsubishi Motors has faced its share of challenges. In this article, I'll explore the history of Mitsubishi Motors in the Philippines, and I'll look at the challenges that the company has faced over the years. I'll also look at the company's future, and I'll see if it's still the same company that it was 47 years ago.

New Montero Sport: As tough as it looks

By David L. Brown

WE'VE seen a lot of SUVs lately, and the new Mitsubishi Montero Sport is one of the most interesting. It's a compact SUV, but it's got a lot of features that make it stand out. For example, it has a 2.4-liter engine that produces 150 horsepower, which is pretty good for a car in this class. It also has a 5-speed manual transmission, which is a nice touch. And, of course, it has a lot of storage space, which is always handy. Overall, the Montero Sport is a pretty good car, and it's worth considering if you're looking for a new SUV.

Accessories and more for the new Montero Sport are available.

Netbooks with more graphics power

By Eusebio Sison

With small displays and low-power processors, netbooks are not the best choice for users who need to do heavy-duty graphics work. But now, netbook makers are working to make netbooks more powerful. Some are even adding dedicated graphics cards to their netbooks. This means that netbooks can now handle more demanding graphics tasks. For example, they can now run games and professional graphics software. This is a big step forward for netbooks, which were once seen as simple devices for basic web browsing and email checking.

Toshiba Netbook

Netbooks are small, portable devices that can be used anywhere. They are often used for basic web browsing and email checking. However, some netbooks now have more powerful processors and dedicated graphics cards. This allows them to run more demanding applications, such as games and professional graphics software. For example, the Asus Eee PC and Toshiba Netbook are two netbooks that have dedicated graphics cards. This means they can handle more demanding graphics tasks than netbooks without dedicated graphics cards. This is a significant improvement for netbooks, which were once seen as simple devices for basic web browsing and email checking.
